EUGENIAKELLYARRESTED: TOO LIVELY, MOTHER SAYS

Heiress Accused of Frequenting All Night Restaurants With Associates Not Approved by Parent-Former Mrs. Frank Gould Gives Bail for Sister.

In a costume she wore at a bal masque at the Garden City Hotel.

Mrs. Helen M. Kelly, widow of the late Edward Kelly, banker and son of bugene Kelly, once a prominent financier associated with Jay Gould, appealed to the last resort yesterday—the police court—to restrain her nineteen-year-old daughter Eugenia, who is wealthy in her own right, from habits and associations of night life in New York. Parental persuasion having failed, Mrs. Kelly haled her daughter before Magistrate House in the Yorkville court, charging har with incorrigibility.

The mother's recital of Miss Kelly's behavior since the girl finished ner course at the Sacred Heart Academy at Manhattanville showed clearly her outgaged feelings. Eugenia, she felt, would become singed like the proverbial moth it she hovered about the flame; she would become morally depraved by her associations and habits in the all night restaurants and cafes, and would not realize her predicament until it was too late. That was the reason Mrs. Kelly said the Supreme Court had allowed her daughter $10,000 a Year.

Mrs. Kelly said the Supreme Court had allowed her daughter $10,000 a year out of her $500,000 inheritance, and that she had deposited that amount in the Lincoln Trust Company in monthly ryments, not wishing her daughter to be spending $50 a day in cafes with on the other hand, the girl's counsel, frank L. Crocker, who with Mrs. Ralph Hill Thomas, formerly Mrs. Frank J. Gould, Eugenia's elder sister, appeared with her in court, tried to show matice on the part of Mrs. Kelly, who is the guardian of her daughter's property, worth about $600,000. He openly insinuated that Mrs. Kelly had sinister motives, that she wanted Miss Kelly committed to an institution, that the committed to an institution, that the daughter was not receiving her full Stare of the income left by her father. These insinuations not only were reented by the court, but denied emphati-Mrs. Kelly.

Miss Ke'ly's suede shoes, side laced in the latest mode, and her small black, chic hat with a large rosette of orange and crimson would have fitted better into the surroundings if there were music and tables and flowered light and dancing couples about.

The girl is an attractive brunette with dark eyes and well formed features. She sat unmoved while her mother told of ber many impudences to her, of her abuse of her mother's interest in her we'fare, and when Mrs. Kelly declared, somewhat chagrined, that Eugenia laughed when asked if she were not sick of her carryings on, Eugenia remained just a unconcerned. She plainly resented though, her mother's assertions that she was simply like a great many other in-experienced girls, not knowing the pitfalls, bo stfully disregarding better judgment and a mother's advice.

Depend upon this store for the thing that you want, rather than the thing that somebody wants to sell. Our buying policy differs from that of many stores, for no merchandise is alluring to us merely because it is offered at a reduced price. That almost always warns us of its undesirability. It is our policy to have always abundant variety of fashionable and wanted goods, in the most desirable grades, and in complete color and size assortments.

That is the chief service of this store. We depend upon an organization of superior efficiency to secure the best for our customers, at the usual price of the commonplace.

Starts a new week of remarkable value giving tomorrow. Like most good things it improves as it goes—there are many attractions added to those it started with. Among them-
